OLLIE'S BREAKFAST.

Ollie Young, the not overly bright employe who is accused of having stolen silverware and other property from the household of Lee Olive, has a refined and in amiable aesthetic taste when it comes to satisfying the inner man. Waking in his cell in the county jail this morning he was told by his fellow prisoners that it was the custom for all inmates to prepare a bill of fare for breakfast in advance, in order to aid Mine Host Dryden to please his guests. Here is Ollie's written on the back of one of the sheriff's envelopes and duly signed with a flourish:

Ham and Eggs Sliced Bread
Cobbie Cream Hot Coffee
Hot Cakes and Honey
Mince Pie
Tell jailer to bring butter
Instead of this Ollie received the Thought Irving Couldn't Act.

Edwin Booth told one story of Irving that revealed a tragedy in that gifted man's life. Edwin M. Royle writes in Harper's Magazine. One day, as they were sitting in Booth's room in the theater, the latter was handed a letter. Irving casually remarked that he recognized the handwriting. Booth offered it to him and asked him if he cared to read it. Fortunately the Englishman declined. Mr. Booth opened it and read the following from Mrs. Henry Irving: "Dear Mr. Booth—Can you spare me a box? I should like to have my sons see what good acting is." During my first season with Booth, quite by accident I found myself in a boarding house in San Francisco kept by a very sweet, quaint old English lady who was an aunt of Henry Irving, and she told me that Mrs. Irving had been known to occupy a box at her husband's performances and ostentatiously read a newspaper during the performance.
